Preface

This book examines the interaction of EU labour law and national and international labour law. EU labour law entered the historical scene at a later stage than national labour law and ILO law when the transition from the industrialised society to a knowledge based information society was well in progress.

The book covers a number of substantive topics affecting labour, notably collective labour law, individual employment contracts, discrimination, free movement of persons, restructuring of enterprises, working environment and enforcement of rights derived from EU labour law.
